HEATHER HAPPENINGS ON THE MENDOCINO COAST

From August 5-8, 2010, I had the opportunity to participate in the Annual National Conference of the North American Heather Society (NAHS) which was hosted in Fort Bragg, California, by the Mendocino Coast Heather Society (MCHS). Besides meeting old friends, making new ones, and visiting many local heather gardens, I also attended (as Secretary) the NAHS Board Meeting, also the Annual General Meeting. The following “report” contains a bit of business stuff and lots of garden memories.

The FUN STUFF: VISITS TO GARDENS-WITH-HEATHER

It was an enjoyable road trip to the NAHS Conference in Fort Bragg, CA, which was hosted by the Mendocino Coast Heather Society (MCHS). After taking the Black Ball ferry to Port Angeles, I drove to Ella May Wulff’s home [1] in Philomath, OR. From here, Ella May and Susie Kay, a member of The (British) Heather Society living in Ireland, drove with me to Fort Bragg [2]. Its mild climate is similar to coastal BC – there’s lots of fog – but the hotter sun tends to burn yellow-foliaged Calluna [3].

The home of the late Edith and Clarke Davis, where their extensive seaside garden [4] still flourishes, served as the location for conference registration and a NAHS Board meeting on August 6, and a continental breakfast the following morning.

On Saturday, NAHS President Mario Abreu led us on a tour of the Mendocino Coast Botanical Gardens [5]; that afternoon we visited three delightful gardens.

On Sunday, we gathered for brunch, toured a nursery, then visited the world-famous Thompson garden in Manchester which was planted by the late Jim Thompson in the 1990s and now valiantly maintained by Bev Thompson. The dragons [6] still greet us, and great mounds of heather [7] beautifully framed the Thompson home.

The conference ended following a visit to Sandy Scott's expansive garden [8] later that afternoon.

But Ella May, Susie and I weren't done visiting gardens!

We repeated our overnight stop in Fortuna, and before we left, visited River Lodge Conference Center to see its expansive heather garden [9] which was planned and planted by the HERE Chapter.

Then, meandering north along California-Oregon Coast before turning eastward to Philomath, we visited the Klamath, CA, garden [10] of Sharon Hardy, a HERE member who helps prune the heathers at River Lodge, some 80 miles to the south. Our final stop was at the Gold Beach, OR., garden [11] of Ramona Bloomingdale.

After staying that night at Ella May's in Philomath, Susie headed for the Portland Airport and I drove back to Port Angeles for the Black Ball ferry to Victoria.
